Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

This group of three two-story, two-bay wide Italianate-style brick houses with shed roofs were built in the 1870s as in-fill structures on a street with houses dating mainly to the 1840s. The original brick facades, which would have been painted, are now all covered with formstone.

The houses are two stories in height, 12' wide, and occupy lots 49' deep. Each house is three small rooms deep and there is no backbuilding. The houses were probably constructed in common bond and were originally painted. Each house has a single hooded chimney located at the rear corner of the house. The shed roofs were probably capped by a continuous wooden cornice consisting of a crown molding supported by simple scroll-sawn brackets decorated with grooves and turnings, but when the formstone was put on in the 1950s or 1960s, a simple sheet metal cornice took its place.

The tall, narrow window and door openings have segmentally arched brick lintels and plain tympanums. The original 2/2 sash has been replaced by newer 1/1 or 6/6 sash. The sills are composed of a row of header bricks. The single light doorway transoms and the doors are all modern replacements. The houses sit on low basements, lit by a double-light sash. Each house is reached by two brick or concrete steps.

Builder/Architect

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

This group of houses is significant as representing a very plain type of small street house that was constructed to serve as inexpensive housing for the influx of newly arrived immigrant families seeking work in harbor-related activities or in the first small factories being built at this time, most of whom were German at the time of construction. The houses were built according to a pattern that was quite common to the city's working class neighborhoods of the period c. 1880 to 1910. Recognizing that workers held different levels of jobs (and pay), builders created a hierarchy of house sizes (and prices) in the new neighborhoods going up to serve the expanding factory districts ringing the harbor and north-east of the central city. Builders acquired anywhere from an eighth to a half of a city block and built 14' to 15'-wide two-story houses on the main streets, and smaller, 11' to 13'-wide two-story houses on the narrower streets bisecting the blocks. Typically, in this period, main street houses might sell for $1,200 - $1,500; small street houses for $700 - $900. Occasionally, the builder retained ownership of his small street houses to provide income for himself as rental properties. In this way people of varying means could afford to live in the same block. If they couldn't afford the approximately $750 purchase price of the small street houses, then they could afford the $8 or so a month it would cost to rent one, while they saved to be able to buy their own home later.

The houses are especially significant as being located in the oldest part of Fells Point, only a few blocks from the water, and represent an integral part of the history of this National Register district. Slated for demolition in the 1960s as part of the planned East-West highway connection existing segments of I-95 to the north and south of the city, these houses were saved by local preservation activists who created the Fells Point National Register District in 1969.
